

Strips of illustration board glued along one edge creates an “envelope” that allows the transparency page (“window”) to be slid in and out as needed.

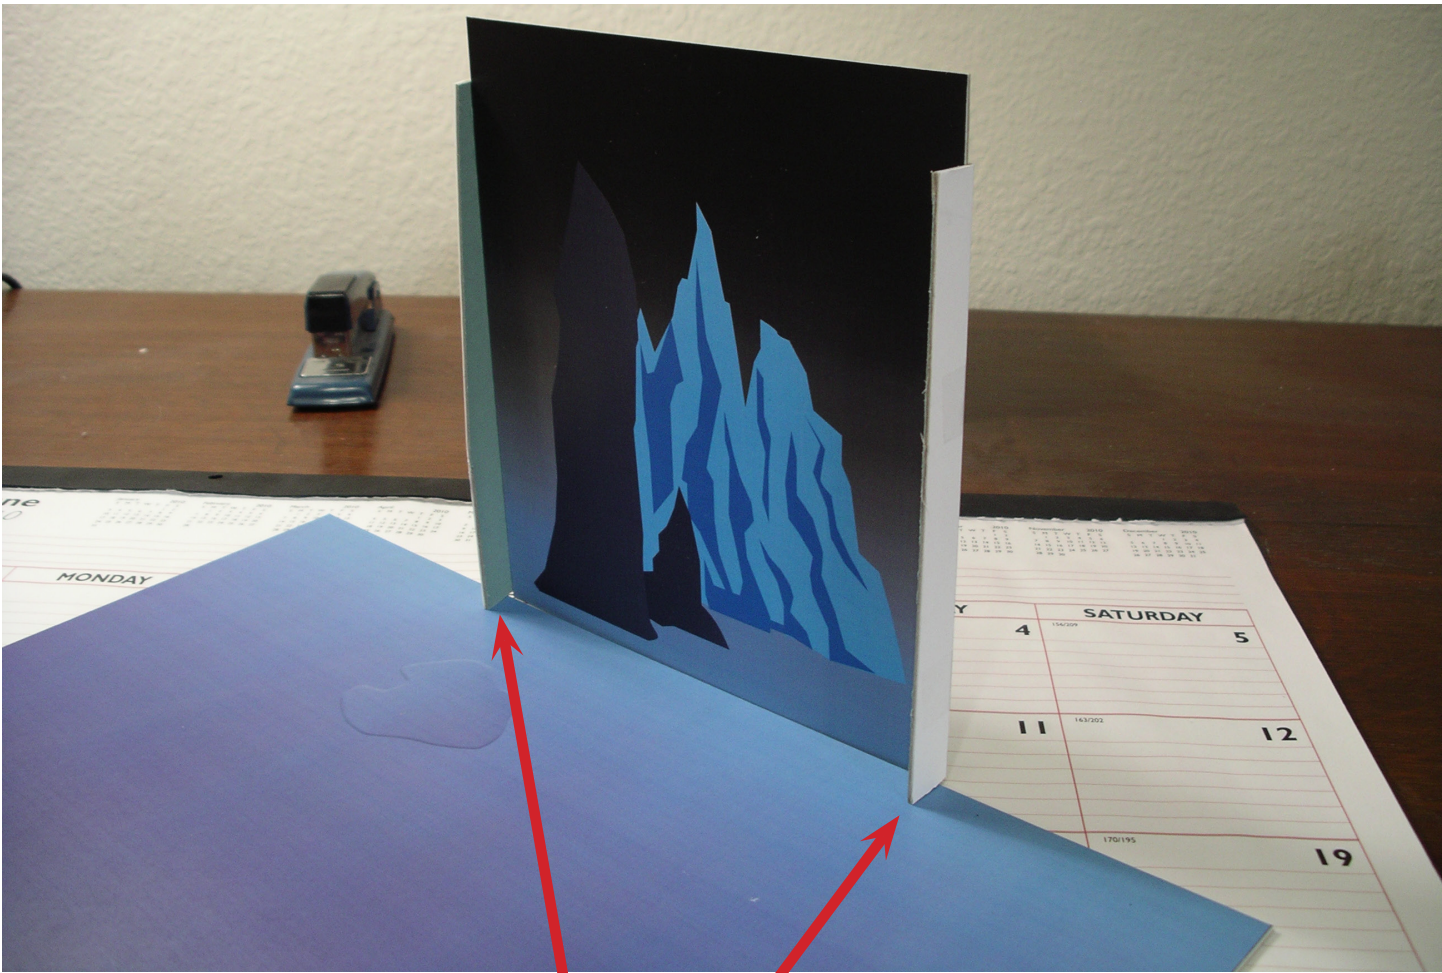

A strip of illustration board glued over the main window “bars” allows for greater stability. In my case, I had hand painted the main bars, and the thin illustration board warped with the water-based acrylic. So I cut the “over strips” and spray painted those, then glued them to the main piece.

Platforms of any size and shape can be added.

Free-standing "iceberg" wall creates illusion of depth.
